If you're looking for a way to make your computer use less power or save money, then you might want to consider using Linux as your primary operating system. This is because it uses less energy than Windows, thereby leaving you with more money in your pocket. Linux offers all the same functionality of Windows without the bloatware, which comes standard with Windows. The software is free and can be downloaded from many different sources like torrents websites like TorrentFunk (which provides free downloads) or BitTorrent (which is paid but much faster). Free software such as LibreOffice or GIMP can be downloaded and installed to provide the same functionality as Microsoft Office and Adobe Photoshop. There are many tutorials available online to help you go from a Windows user who is completely lost with Linux to a knowledgeable and efficient Linux user. Since the software is free and open-source, you can tweak and customize it however you wish. http://www1.informatik.uni-hamburg.de/~schmitz/lxr/

Regardless of how hard you work to keep your computer safe from viruses, spyware, malware, etc., there is always a chance that one of these malicious programs will infect your system anyway. At least, there was a time you could find answers at VirusTotal.com. The site was one of the largest and most comprehensive collections of virus protection tools you could find online . But now it looks like that collection is no more. That is because the site has been sold to Bitly, a company that provides web analytics and social media marketing solutions. While the details of the deal are not fully known yet, we can assume that Bitly plans to continue using Virus Total as its main data source and may even incorporate it into its own service offerings in some way. No information has been released regarding how the files will be handled in the future. Nor whether the site will continue to be used by antivirus companies for their analysis and collaboration needs. http://www.virustotal.com/

Compared to other operating systems, Mac OS is a bit more difficult to use and navigate because it is an all-in-one environment that features a computer, phone and portable media player all in one. The Macbooks, iPods and iPhones are all designed by Apple Inc., but each of them use different operating systems for various purposes. The software included with these devices ranges from simple word processing software to complete operating systems that can run other applications besides their intended use.
